Tips for Family Reading

You can turn reading into family quality time! Have other children join in or invite family members for a warm story time. Each of the participants can be given a role, such as choosing which book to read, turning the pages, making tea or serving refreshments – and together, you will create shared moments of bonding and fun.

Mirik Snir

Mirik Snir (1948) is a well-loved award-winning children's poet and author. Snir has written over 100 children and toddlers' books with a unique style that has turned everyday childhood experiences into Israeli classics that have been accompanying children for years.

Reading and Making Believe

Make believe games develop toddlers' linguistic abilities, and encourage them to generate experiences from simple, everyday activities. This book can inspire you to play together: Perhaps a doll is tired and wants you to read it a story? Maybe a blanket or pillows can be turned into a tent?

Turning a Box into a House

You can also make a house out of a cardboard box! Engage your toddlers and ask them: What do we do at home? What is important to have in a house? If the house you made is big enough, you can even sit inside and read it.

A Story in Motion

There are numerous verbs in this book that highlight the children's shared actions. You can have fun by reading the book while adding a gesture to demonstrate each action – for instance, you can pretend to open the door, “roll a carpet out” or “plant flowers”, while allowing your toddlers to mimic your motions
