Pay Attention to Me Too

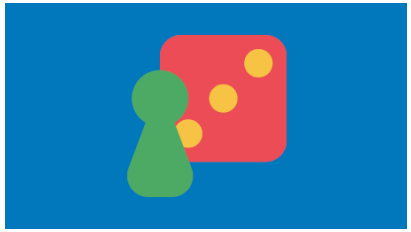

A discussion on the last rain of the year can help children understand their own emotions. You can ask: “Why is it important for the last rain to be noticed?” “What did it do to get attention?” “Do you also want others to pay attention to something that you have done?” “Have you ever felt jealous of anyone for getting attention?”

Human Nature

What does the sun feel like when it sets? What does the lightning say to the thunder? Humanizing natural phenomena can help us express our inner world as well as be amusing. You can humanize nature by playing this game on our way to kindergarten, at bedtime, or while on a trip.

A greeting card for the last rain

The last rain of the year will probably be happy to know that you are waiting for it to come and bid farewell until you meet again next year. You can make a delightful colorful greeting card together for the last rain: What will you thank it for? What will you wish it?

Enjoying the Rain

Put on your coats and go outside for a few minutes on a rainy day! Are the raindrops hot or cold on the palms of your hands? Does the rain taste like anything? Is it heavy or light?
